President's Message

I recently Zoomed into ScriptDC to listen to Catherine Hardwicke describe how she directed TWILIGHT, THIRTEEN, and other films and television productions. It was a great presentation, moderated by Washington Post film critic Ann Hornaday. I learned a lot. But oddly enough, as Hardwicke spoke, I kept thinking back to a former coworker from my corporate days, my old company's CFO.

He was basically a brilliant genius, or so I thought. Each quarter, he would present our company's financial results to the board, and he did so effortlessly, with a complete grasp of the details. If questioned about any particular item, he was able to drill down and immediately offer a sharp and clear analysis.

One day, I was sitting next to him at the conference room table. From my vantage point, I saw that his spreadsheets were peppered with notes upon notes. Afterwards, when I asked him about all those notes, he explained that he spent hours preparing, and that those notes were absolutely essential to being able to keep everything in his head.

I told him that I had been always in awe of what I had assumed was his effortless command of his material. He shook his head. "Nope, just a lot of hard work," he said (or words to that effect).

So, how does that relate to Catherine Hardwicke? Well, listening to her talk, I learned the following:

- She started in the industry as a production designer, working for years learning various aspects of filmmaking before directing her first feature.
- She gets to set 30 minutes early, and stands where the camera will be to help crew position their equipment.
- She took acting classes, so that she could better understand how to direct her actors.
- She's been known to move furniture on set herself, to maximize flow, positioning, and light.

· She creates detailed set diagrams, so that she knows in advance all the possible camera angles.

· She builds in as much rehearsal time as the budget will allow, focusing on rehearsing the scenes that she is most worried about.

· If her budget doesn't fully support storyboard artists, she storyboards her scenes herself.

· Her mantra: "Fix it in prep."

Like my former colleague, Hardwicke puts in a lot of behind-the-scenes work to make her final product look effortless. She doesn't just waltz onto set and expect amazing things to happen. She put in the work.

I appreciated her candor and honesty. She didn't make the process sound easy. She shared the reality of what it takes. On a personal level, her talk left me with a renewed determination to roll up my sleeves, dig in, and do all the things that need to be done on all of my projects. That's certainly not the result I expected when I signed up to attend the ScriptDC event! But in these dark winter Groundhog Days of the pandemic, it's the result, that I needed. I hope that you will have a similar opportunity to be educated, informed, and inspired by one of WIFV's many upcoming programs.

Respectfully,

Cathie Saadeh

Reel Moms and BIPOC groups are being formed. Email membership@wifv.org if you want to join their roundtable listservs.

And we still welcome receiving photos of you at work - writing, filming, acting, being a stellar PA - membership@wifv.org is where you should email them. Please provide project name and/or photo credit.

Upcoming Events

Based on a True Story - December 2

Not every true story is best told as a documentary. Sometimes you need to work from the basic facts and write the rest. Adaptation requires deep knowledge of the story, feel for the time period and circumstances, and decisions about what is important to include to move the story along.

Jeremy Kagan, writer/director of CONSPIRACY: The Trial of the Chicago 8 (1987) will share how he made those decisions. It will be an interesting exploration of the form given the recent release of THE TRIAL OF THE CHICAGO 7. Kagan's film is available for viewing on Vimeo and Amazon Prime. Read Mr. Kagan's bio here.

News You Can Use

Cunningham Receives AmEx Business Grant

WIFV member Alyscia Cunningham, was awarded a $25,000 grant from American Express for her company, Her House Media. AmEx has awarded 100 black women owned businesses $25,000 grants for their 100 for 100 program, in partnership with iFundWomen. The program includes the award of funds, marketing of their businesses, and participation in their 100 day's worth of educational content, consisting of videos, articles, and opportunities to pursue mentorship sessions with industry experts. Alyscia will use the funds to support distribution efforts of her documentary film I AM MORE THAN MY HAIR, and to create an Accessible exhibition of the portraits from the book, for upcoming exhibit at Sandy Spring Museum (March 17 - May 31, 2021).

Caldera Receives Better Angels Lavine Fellowship

We are so thrilled to recognize HOME FROM SCHOOL: The Children of Carlisle with a Better Angels Lavine Fellowship Award. This new fellowship program is a part of the Library of Congress Lavine/Ken Burns Prize for Film, which recognizes excellence in American history documentary filmmaking. Our goal is to collaborate with filmmakers telling America's stories and provide them with resources and support. Like the Lavine Family, who makes this fellowship possible, we at The Better Angels Society recognize that our democracy is strengthened and enriched when more Americans see films like HOME FROM SCHOOL. -- Courtney Chapin, Executive Director, The Better Angels Society

Synopsis: In 2017 a Northern Arapaho delegation travels from the Wind River Indian Reservation in Wyoming to Carlisle, Pennsylvania to retrieve their children buried there a century ago. With the unearthing of the remains, the film journeys through the troubled legacy of Indian boarding schools and follows the brave efforts of these native peoples they seek to heal historic wounds.

Founded in 2015 by writer and filmmaker Geoff O'Gara, Caldera Productions' mission is to find original stories rooted in the West and bring them to life on the screen. We produce independent documentary features and shorts as well as work with clients to develop their filmmaking ideas. Our subjects range from endangered species (FERRET TOWN) to cowhands (THE DRIFT) and take on issues such as Native American boarding schools (HOME FROM SCHOOL) and the first women allowed to vote (THE STATE OF EQUALITY).

FILMS ACROSS BORDERS Stories of Resilience and Hope

Films Across Borders, a showcase of critically acclaimed films, documentaries and shorts from around the world, launches virtually this fall.
